In speaking of the work undertaken by the Carnegie organization for the promotion of international peace, Dr. Eliot frankly admitted that neither he nor his associates believed that disarmament by the powers was impresent wholly desirable.

Outlining the plans under which the peace trustees are working, Dr. Elioti gave some moments to an argument showing that there is no possibility of a war between the United States and Japan and that such a conflict could only be brought about by America forcing it. In this connection he said in part:

Japan's Position. "Japan is in the position of Great Britain-Japan on the Pacific, Great Britain on the Atlantic; insular powers, insular populations in large number. Neither nation produces its own food supply. Both import a considerable proportion of their foods. Great Britain does not have any stock on hand at any time for more than six weeks' supply of food for its population, absolutely dependent on the steady coming over-seas of the greater part of its food. Japan is in a similar position; however, not so extreme. Both countries are dependent for the raw materials for numberless industries on the seas-the sea-borne traffic. Both feel that their national life, not to speak of national prosper-ity, depend on the free access to their led and blocked consistently shores under all conditions of these seven rounds.

Navies Are Needed. "In the present state of the world, him hard with a succession of rightwhat means are there for securing the hand hooks. this sea or another. Now the domination of the ocean is an extremely la borious undertaking and a very adventurous one. No matter whether a little sea, like the English channel or the Baltic, or a large one like the Mediterranean, but when you get to such vast areas as the Atlantic, and the much larger of the Pacific, the domination of an ocean is simply impessible by any naval power now existing. No nation has ever been equal to dominating the Atlantic or the Pacific. It has been demonstrated that there is no nation which could possibly send 100,000 men across the Pacific, guarding them on the way by a large number of ships of war from the attack of torpedo boats and submarines, and land 100,-000 men, with horses, food and mupitions on the opposite shore of the

The Hoogs-Stephenson match was umpired by that leather-lunged shouter Mr. Robert Sinclair. It is said of "Sink's" vocal qualifications that he once smashed the ear drum of a butterfly that happened to be passing the stand when he called the score, Being naturally kind to animals, he seldom calls the score at all now, to avoid a repetition of the tragedy. A. E. Larlmer, who held down a line, was almost as considerate of the sick people in the block, and seldom spoke above a whisper.
